

Undoing the Lacking/Getting Cycle

by Dan Joseph

As we block our awareness of God's Love with our own self-generated thoughts, we immediately feel lacking and incomplete. This, you could say, is the "human experience" – a sense of scarcity, limitation, and deprivation.

We then try to "fix" the situation by trying to get or take what we seem to be lacking – a possession, a person, an accomplishment. Unfortunately, this just reinforces the original belief that we're lacking and incomplete.

This lacking/getting cycle continues until we begin to question the premise behind it. Perhaps we're not lacking and incomplete. Perhaps we don't need to gather more things.

As we release our false beliefs – and once again open to the experience of God's Love for us – we begin to re-experience our wholeness, completeness, and limitless gifts.

In re-opening to the ever-offered gift of God's Love, we are filled with an abundant sense of inspiration and peace.

As we do this, we realize that we have more than we can contain for ourselves – and that our true joy lies in sharing our abundance with others.